I Have a Friend Who is Blind (Basic Manuals for Families and Friends of the Disabled) Hannah Carlson, Dale Carlson
Blindness does not discriminate - any baby can be born blind, and any adult can become blind, but if a blind person has training and opportunity blindness need not be a tragedy. This manual for people with blind friends offers advice, help and knowledge about the resources available. People who are blind are usually portrayed in two ways: those who are completely helpless and can't do anything, and those who are "superhuman" and can do everything. The truth is that people who are blind or visually impaired can do most things, but need help with some things. In a world which is so insistent on visual clues, people regard a physical limitation as a failure. This guide attempts to redress the balance.
