The Thousand Year Conspiracy Paul Winkler
This book attempts to contribute to the work of identification of the forces behind Nazism. It results from research undertaken to substantiate this hypothesis: that Nazism is not the product of some "spontaneous generation" crystallized by Hitler's evil genius; and that it is not-as it has often been described-simply a reaction to the harsh terms of the Versailles treaty; finally, that Nazism does not derive from some basic trait of the German character. Chapter 1 is introductory. It presents a few characteristic quotations from German writers of the past one hundred and fifty years. These passages, all written by members of what may be called the Prussian School, are evidence that Mein Kampf is merely a rehash of ideas frequently expressed before Hitler voiced them. But what was the common inspiration of these earlier authors? In seeking an answer to this question, we first perceive the contours of the conspiracy - very old but very real. Its existence - fantastic, at first thought - remains the only possible explanation of the facts. Chapters II-VII are an attempt to retrace this centuries old conspiracy, the actual subject of this book. Chapters II and III examine in particular the hidden forces responsible for the rise of Prussia and the Germany of Bismarck and Wilhelm II. Chapter IV introduces the "Fehme," the blood tribunal of the Middle Ages, into the picture. Chapters V, VII and VII show that Hitler's rise to power would have been impossible had not Hitler placed himself and his movement at the service of the Prusso-Teutonicd forces. In Chaters VIII, IX and X. the effort is made to search out behind the specific subject - the "actual conspiracy" - its fundamental basis. Whatever may have appeared earlier to be fortuitous development now takes its proper place within an evolution which derives from basic, organic causes. Forces have pursued paths completely divergent from those take by the other peoples of Western civilization.
