Just One of Me: Confessions of a Less-Than-Perfect Single Parent Dandi Daley Knorr
SUPERPARENT
Cook • Chauffeur • Financial provider • Maid • Playmate • Juggler • Administrator • Counselor • Referee

How often do you feel the stress of parenthood? You're not alone. For single parents, it's a constant struggle to be both father and mother, playmate and authority, bottle-washer and financial provider.

As a single parent to Jenny, 8, and Katy, 5, Dandi Daley Knorr knows from experience the ups and downs of single parenting. But she doesn't claim to have all the answers: "In parenting, for every complex question, there is a simple answer-and it is always wrong."

Instead she shares some of her secrets about how to avoid superparent burnout, distinguishing the greats from the not-so-greats about you and your kids, and whether you should be first or last on your priority list. She also discusses the question of whether or not to remarry and the facts about child support and visitation.

With a sense of humor, Dandi shares how you can handle kids and their emotions (and your own!) and raise okay kids in today's hectic world. And above all, she challenges you to accept God as your #1 Marriage Partner-for life.

Dandi Daley Knorr is a teacher and frequent lecturer as well as the author of numerous books, including Splitting Up: When Your Friend Gets a Divorce (Shaw) and two children's fiction series, Jenny and Josh Books and Katy & Allyson J. Cat.

"Every single parent needs help and encouragement, and this book is crammed full of both. (I only wish I could have read it while I was parenting alone.) Dandi Knorr has clothed the problems and stresses that accompany single parenting with enough humor to make the book delightful reading, yet she doesn't mask the difficulties solo parents face. I plan to use this book as a guide for group study."
SCOTTIE MAY, coordinator of ESPRIT, a ministry to single parents, Wheaton, Illinois
