Well, for personal/business coaches, we can't let too many mistakes happen or we'll be out of business before we could say, "Whoops, I won't do that again." Why should coaches be concerned about (and look out for) making mistakes as a coach? Isn't failure feedback? Sure it is, but for coaches, minimizing the amount of time we fail (or make mistakes) will help keep us on track with our own goals as coaches, keep clients and prospects flowing in, keep clients moving towards their own goals with our help, and above all, keep our coaching businesses operating at optimal capacity earning the income we deserve.
