Shadows and Colours: Flickers of Thought Mr Godwin O. Akasie
In the consciousness of Being, there are no values such as humans attach to the particulars of this world. There are no moral qualities as either “bad” or “good”; the moral qualities are human concepts based on a relationship of acts and conditions to ourselves, to our personal welfare, or our religious or social inclinations. To our mortal senses, the world is not fair to many – some people seem to be selected for better treatment. But one thing for sure is that with time, everything becomes clear, all questions are answered, what’s broken is restored, new things are “discovered”, broken hearts are mended, love returns, and you will look over your shoulder with tears in the eyes at life’s utter perfection. This book bears in its pages my reflections on some issues that have aroused my sense of being, some things to think about. They are captured in flashes of thought, essays, articles and short stories. Included, amongst several others, are such topical issues as: Why “bad” things happen to “good” people; Attachment versus Letting Go; Inducement to Deceive, Cheat and Lie; A test of Integrity; The Law of Reciprocity; Ethics in Business, Politics, Sports and Journalism; Trustworthiness; Our Legacy; Perception and Perspectives; True Colours; A life of Substance; and Moments that Matter. While some border on morals generally, some others touch on conscience, and yet a few on ethics. Some of them might strike a chord in you too and give you something to think about in our changing world of valuation and perspectives.
