A CASE OF NEED

MICHAEL CRICHTON AS JEFFERY HUDSON

A CASE OF NEED MICHAEL CRICHTON AS JEFFERY HUDSON
Written by Michael Crichton under the pseudonym Jeffery Hudson. It was first published in 1968. The novel was adapted into the 1972 film The Carey Treatment, and was re-released in 1993 under Crichton's own name. Summary: Dr. John Berry, the protagonist, is a pathologist working in Boston during the 1960s, a time when abortion was illegal in the United States. The story opens with an introduction of the various requirements and challenges of the medical profession during the era. Subsequently, Dr. Berry is notified that his friend, an obstetrician named Arthur Lee, has been arrested and accused of performing an illegal abortion that led to the death of Karen Randall, a member of a prominent Boston medical dynasty. Berry does not believe the allegations, but the situation is further complicated by the fact that Lee is already well-known within the medical community as an abortion provider and that Berry has in the past helped Lee disguise medical samples to hide the fact that Lee's dilation and curettage patients were pregnant.
